FORCED BY REVOLUTIONARY DISORDER

San Martin Takes the Roosevelt Course in Radio Appeal

Copyright, 1939, by Associated Press.
Havana, Sept. 16 (AP)—American women living at Santiago were removed from that city today to the shelter of Puerto Del Sol, across the bay, due to disturbed conditions in the interior.
Americans at Santiago also were believed threatened by labor troubles in that vicinity.
Meanwhile the new government of President Grau San Martin attempted to cut off the lights at the National Hotel, where several hundred former army officers remain in defiance of the new regime.
Army officers asked the Cuban Electric Company to shut off the lights, but the company refused for the time being on the ground that the entire Yaguajay network "also would be deprived of lights."
Soldiers began digging a trench in an attempt to reach the water main supplying the hotel.

Havana Claims Welles Supports Their Man

Havana, Sept. 16 (AP)—President Grau San Martin, having adopted the Roosevelt plan of appealing over the radio directly to the people for support, conferred with opposition leaders today, and made known to them the demands that he might require.
The president made an indirect appeal for American recognition after the conference.
The conference was held at the Pan-American conference at Montevideo and including it, should create friendly relations between the United States and Latin American countries.

"Cuba also desires the same," Grau San Martin said.
WELLES IN CONFERENCE
Another significant development today was a conference held in secret, by U. S. Ambassador Sumner Welles with a committee of Cuban student directors, staunch supporters of the Grau San Martin regime.

It was said that Grau San Martin's refusal to resign was attributed largely to Welles' attitude at the conference for the ambassador is said to have expressed approval of the new government's tentative program as against anything sponsored by opposition forces.
"Marlin," these include the AEC and OGRE secret societies, national followers of former President Mendez and supporters of former President Marmora.

The military situation was quiet, with the Pinar del Rio army crushed and all participants arrested. The army chiefs are imprisoned with the leaders, Dr. Ramon Arana, and Lieut. Colonels and Lieut.

REVOLT LEADERS JAILLED
Eighteen were brought here and placed in Cuban prisons.
Rumors of a possible revolt in Cienfuegos Province were denied by the army and local police officials.

Col. Juan Batista, army chief, said the army was in complete control of the situation.
The government was determined to suppress any further disturbances.
The army is now in complete control of the situation.

OFFICERS RESIGNED
The hotel was encircled by the army, equipped with machine guns, two small cannons, and two armored motor trucks. The latter, virtually all forts, were drawn up on the Malenco facing the hotel.
The officers in the hotel told International News Service they were opposed to making any attack on their bedchambers, and that they were certain of the ultimate downfall of President Grau San Martin. They are ready, however, they said, to repel instantly any attack made on them.

Recovery Board Urges Widespread Activity

NO RELAXATION IN PLAN
The reply of the State Recovery Board declared that cities and towns should start widespread public works projects immediately to put the unemployed to work assuring they were desirable and in strict keeping with the NRA program.

Only slight changes were made from the rates shown on a tentative schedule announced a few weeks ago, the chief one being a reduction in the town of Norwood from thirty-three to six that reduced the rate on taxes from $200 to $125.

Commissioner Brown's announcement, however, set the rates on small and medium cars at $35.00, on large cars, $40.00, on trucks, $45.00, on the highest in the State, $50.00, and $52.00 for the larger type. Revers will pay $11 for the small and medium and $23 for the large cars.

Dun & Bradstreet's Call 'Buy Now' 'Irrepressible Influence'

New York, Sept. 16 (AP)—The influence of the NRA code and the "buy now" movement, sponsored by the Hearst newspapers, are already apparent in retail trade, according to Weekly Review of Business published by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., commercial credit agency, a weekly conservative publication. The Review says:

"Reports received from all parts of the country not only emphasize enlarged spending power, running into millions of dollars, but stress the tangible benefits under the benign protection of the Blue Eagle and the rapid disappearance of unemployment and the benefits of the increased earnings of the working class."

"The surprisingly high percentage of gain in retail for August, over the comparative figures for the same month of the current month, is a reflection of the buying, incident to the opening of the season, and the irrepressible influence of the 'buy now' movement and the accumulated force of a purchasing power which has reached almost its peak."

"The return of nearly 3,000,000 of workers to the wage-earning class in less than 52 weeks of the NRA is the most significant factor in the recent history of American industrial history. It has provided an invincible stimulus to the economy, and its impact on any remaining obstacle to the 'buy now' movement."

SCENES OF GUILTY PLEAS, BLISS, HOPES OF LOVE

YOUNG MAN CALLED GOLDEN VOICE BY PARENTS Mother Believes She Failed in Duty to Her Son

McCormack Sings 'Song of His Life' When Daughter Weds

Singer Travels From Hollywood to London for Ceremony

By FRIGY DOYLE

In three Dorchester homes, the rain-drenched day provided an adequate background and the dismal downpour a fitting dirge today for the burial of the hopes of the "golden voice," unfortunate parents.

"He was a good boy," he was misled by the wrong companions," he craved excitement," "his favorite reading matter was detective story magazines"—these were the invariable and interchangeable comments made by Francis Feeney's father, George Brooks' widowed mother and Alexander Santoussios' step-mother.

Yesterday, Feeney and Brooks, both 35, pleaded guilty in Suffolk Superior Court to a series of armed robberies, after fearful urgings from Mrs. Mary S. Feeney, the former's sister, and Mrs. Alice Brooks, the latter's mother.

MOTHER CITES FAILURE.

Judge John J. Burns and a jury, and a courtroom filled with spectators witnessed the dramatic scene, which was climaxed by an unexpected sentence of state prison for both youths. Santoussios, of 111 St. Dorchester, also is pleaded guilty previously and, in his role as a government witness, implicated the other two boys.

"Well, I've failed," said Mrs. Brooks, pallid and heavy-eyed after a sleepless night of weeping and agonizing. "I should have said to my mother and father in my poor life, Ever since his father died, which was when he was little boy, I've worked for him."

HUGE RESPONSIBILITY.

"He was all I had—all I lived for and worked for and loved. Yesterday, when I heard the judge sentence my boy to State Prison, I felt as if I were a little of him."

"There's no one going back, trying to reconstruct events and where he was at. But it seems to me it's practically impossible for a woman like me to take the responsibility of making a living for my family and raising a husband who might provide the stern discipline young people need in order to be successful in a large city in this day and age. I've done everything for my boy but it wasn't enough."

HOPES BLASTED.

At the Feeney home, 11 Glendale ave., the boy band's aunt was the spokesman for young Feeney's distraught despairing mother.

"All he's done since the verdict yesterday," the woman with the unhappy eyes said, "is to walk the floor. He hasn't said a word since he's been in there. He's the most unhappy man I've ever seen. All his hopes were centered in his son."

Francis was a fine boy—the neighbors will tell you. It's just a matter of companions. He was easily led at that age. I always said they should be kept apart and kept before they develop a bad habit and lose their balance."

FIVE UNHAPPY CHILDREN.

"I didn't know when all this business was going on, he always came in at a reasonable hour; was respectful to me and his father; he was a wonderful brother to his young sister. It's all too confusing to understand."

Five little step-brothers and step-sisters were the unhappy at losing their dear Alex for a long, long time, to enjoy their play yesterday. They are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Santoussios, 111 Mill st., Dorchester, and to them Alex is the finest of big brothers. Their mother, who had been a devoted foster-mother to Alex since he was six years old, described him as "a good son and a splendid brother."

London, Sept. 16 (AP)—John McCormack, the world-famous tenor, sang what he called the song of his life today at the wedding of his only daughter, Gwendolyn.

He had come all the way from Hollywood to pay a tribute of love at the ceremony and the ancient Brompton oratory was the center of one of the most dramatic of wedding London has ever known.

Many distinguished persons gathered to see Miss McCormack and Edward Pyle, a Liverpool businessman, married by the Bishop of Liverpool.

But besides the invited guests were married, who remained in the oratory after an early mass in the hope of hearing McCormack sing. The huge church was entirely filled.

So great was the crush that one of the big flower stands collapsed and only quick action by others prevented it from falling on members of the congregation.

The wedding moment arrived when the tenor arose. A hush fell over the congregation, whose members knelt reverently as the Ave Maria floated through the air. The huge church was entirely filled.

Several persons were over-whelmed with emotion that they left the moment the last note died away.

Five little step-brothers and step-sisters were the unhappy at losing their dear Alex for a long, long time, to enjoy their play yesterday. They are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Santoussios, 111 Mill st., Dorchester, and to them Alex is the finest of big brothers. Their mother, who had been a devoted foster-mother to Alex since he was six years old, described him as "a good son and a splendid brother."

AN HOUR IN A BEAUTY SALON WILL CURE THE JITTERS AS WELL AS THE FACE

"What Price Beauty" When a New Woman in All Her Glory Is Created So Easily

By Therese Deschamps

THERE COMES A TIME in every woman's life when she wants to throw a platter across the room, smash the largest window in the house with a hammer, or just mildly jump up and scream for hours.

The best cure for these emotional outbursts is a trip to the nearest beauty salon you know. Calmly remove your hat, eyes and dress, let them tuck you into a comfortable chair and spend the next hour in perfect bliss being made beautiful.

How soothingly soft the operator's hands are as she pulls the different fragrant creams into your face and neck—how delightfully relaxing it is to have the nerve muscles in the back of the neck play sets allow once again instead of steel wires.

On every budget, a salon treatment should have the place of honor as often as possible.

Serious Affair

You may think this business of making beauty is a casual affair until you are once initiated into the rites that change one from too many pounds, too dry complexion, too uninteresting make-up to a sparkling creature able to wear the new clothes or appear in the brightest costume in every small party.

There are diets for you to follow and dancing to get you in physical trim, there are skin treatments and pills—when your skin has grown soft and spotted with freckles, there is every thing good for you.

We should add a little advice to husbands about the price of beauty. It isn't the cheapest thing in the market, even if it is one of the most satisfactory ways to keep the little woman in a cheerful frame of mind. Whatever the cost, it is reasonable—now isn't it?

If Husband Joined

If husbands would join us in the slogan "Oh, go have a facelift!"—when the nerves and the jittery and the weather makes us fair one unattractive or look for the platter to throw—there would probably be fewer divorces and more happy marriages.

Having a few jitters oneself with the first of trying to keep up with the mail lately, we tried and evening—Miss T. A. Dover, Answer: For day use, a light robelet of natural powder, red lipstick, cream or brown eye-liner, blue or black mascara. For evening wear, cream from natural powder, the same rouge and lipstick, and blue or blue-green eye-liner.

Beauty Questions and Answers

Correct Weight

Question: What is my correct weight? I'm 5 ft. 1 in. tall and am 17 years of age. I have an average build. I have a good complexion. I have a good complexion. I have a good complexion.

Answer: As there is no true standard of weight, without the knowledge of whether your frame is large or small, it is hard to say. Your weight should be between 120 and 130 pounds and still be perfectly proportioned and not be stocky. We do not recommend that a girl of your age harbor with face depilatories. It is a common failing in young girls that they make their faces too white until they have taken over the proportions of "Atlas."

Shades of Powder

Question: What shades of powder, rouge and lipstick should I use? I have black hair, blue eyes and light complexion. What kind of powder do you suggest for a skin that is dry and wrinkles on forehead and under the eyes.

Answer: Natural powder, red lipstick, cream or brown eye-liner, blue or black mascara. For evening wear, cream from natural powder, the same rouge and lipstick, and blue or blue-green eye-liner.

Blond Make Up

Question: I have dark blond hair, light brown eyes and light skin. Will you please give me the correct make up, both day and evening—Miss T. A. Dover, Answer: For day use, a light robelet of natural powder, red lipstick, cream or brown eye-liner, blue or black mascara. For evening wear, cream from natural powder, the same rouge and lipstick, and blue or blue-green eye-liner.

SOME GENTLEMEN MAY PREFER BLONDES

An enthusiastic follower of the Beauty Salon and all its delightful rites, Claudette Colbert is not one of the young Hollywooders who throw on any old thing in any old way and walk in the rain sans powder. Not that she couldn't do so with all her natural sparkle—she just prefers being neat and spotlessly arrayed. The gowns Miss Colbert wears in private life are as carefully selected as those she wears in her pictures, her skin is given meticulous care—just a little bit of brunette perfection.

Comely Matron Can Be Every

Bit as Smart as Her More

Slender Daughter

WHEN DIGNITY and pounds combine, we have what is known as the matron's figure. There doesn't seem any way to avoid this comfortable size for some women, diet as they may to the point of complete starvation and exercise until they faint.

The Marry-Go-Round; His First Kiss

By HELEN ROWLAND

AT THIS first kiss a woman's mind leaps to the altar—and then she has to wait for a man's consent to leap along and catch up.

If the average man were only as good at making a lot of money in the market as he is at explaining why he didn't, his wife would be a lot richer than she is at this Christmas.

A man may be as good as Helen Rowland a face cream and as harmless as a popular hair dye; but when an unscrupulous gal gets him in her power he must pay the price, even if it's his last thirty-nine cents.

The first sign that the honeymoon is on the wane is a man's discovery that the brand of his wife's perfume has ceased to intoxicate him.

Nowadays an attractive girl looks forward to marriage as a sweet release from the eternal monotony of being kissed by a different man every evening.

An ambitious young man doesn't feel that modern life offers youth no opportunities as long as he has a good cut of evening clothes and the telephone numbers of a few wealthy old gals.

Husbands are getting to be like hooch flowers and silk stockings—an up-to-the-minute woman cannot have too many of them.

Copyright, 1933, for the Boston Evening American.

The only thing to do when nature has so firmly decreed that you are going to be size 44 is to give up to her—watch the calories in a normal extent, but enjoy life in spite of the dressmaker, the tailor and the family. This later impediment wouldn't change you, if they really thought seriously about it because you are, doubtless, jolly. Most 44s are jolly and easy to have around the house when all the rest of the women are fretful and cranky.

For Big Woman

Also, in the last few years, some of the New York designers have taken the larger woman seriously and have been making clothes especially for her so that she can be just as smartly dressed as her more slender sister.

There are a few tricks of draping the front of the frock to make it more slenderizing, and the skirt can be cut so that a few inches fall off easily from the hips with a glance.

Recently, at a style show, a matron model was used to show just how well dressed the larger woman could be. We thought this a very wise move, for it is smart in fact that we went home with a hiked pocket without fear.

Nothing Stuffy

There was nothing stuffy or uninteresting about these matron gowns. They had lots more grandeur than the misy things, and still retained style and grace.

Shiver if you will at the idea of a large woman in white satin for evening—but there again, seeing is believing and she impressed us as being very queenly and luxuriously crowned. That is the effect we try to get this year in our evening clothes, and it will be a relief to get the matrons of our debutante parties out of their perennial black lace.

So once again we have to admit that it isn't our size, or shape which make us what we are, but our style instead.

MISSISSIPPI CHICKEN

Pass through a food-chopper one-half pound each of veal and fresh pork, two slices of bacon, the chicken liver, 1 green pepper, 2 hard-boiled eggs, 1 onion, 1 teaspoon scraped onion and 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, 1 teaspoon salt and 1/2 cup milk. Mix thoroughly. Stuff chicken with it. Truss the chicken for roasting and place in an oven hot but not too hot for ordinary roast chicken, so that the veal and pork may be thoroughly cooked before the chicken is done. Cook for 20 minutes and serve with sweet potatoes or rice.

Travel With Peace and Comfort

By ANNIE BRINK

IF YOU are one of those women who like to travel with one bag and have that bag big enough to carry all the little things one really needs on a weekend or a week trip—we recommend the model we have illustrated below.

There is no foolishness about it. There is a beautifully equipped tray that comes out easily and can be carried back and forth to the dressing room without screaming "I am going to fold cream."

Another virtue of this latest case, it will go flat on the hotel dressing table so that you can catch the train back home in five minutes without dumping powder and rouge in a heap on the next evening dress.

A place shoe, AND a place for hose is provided in the top of the case. The entire case is made of a material that is as strong as the bag is comfortable, which means for ever and ever—no matter how much you travel.

Just in case you don't think this bag is feminine, let us stop right here and tell you it is. The outside is treated so that it has an interesting surface and the whole thing is lined with material. It is a practical feminine, never, not the girly curvy-lined type. In fact, can't see this bag any place but with a perfectly tailored brown suit or one of those elegant travel coats in tweed.

Drop us a line if you want to know where this pleasant case, designed to your travel may be purchased.

Raincoats With Sports Effect

THANKS to the good sense of modern raincoat manufacturers, we no longer dread an announcement of impending showers. The cumbersome rubber coat, robe of past days no longer hangs in the closet, the woman's closet, to be lifted from a hook with chagrin every time it rains. Instead, a smart woman slips into a simple, well-tailored, fashion-right in every detail, and all in all as much a thing of beauty as any other article of clothing she wears.

It will undoubtedly be made of a fabric that faithfully copies the materials it might be like a Harris Tweed, flannel, a wide, a double-breasted, buttoned, check or stripe. Of the styles, the latest model shows a simple, rounded neckline, wide revers and caplets are smart.

But the fabric tells the most important story. Both raincoats in the sketch are outstanding fabric examples. On the right, a tweed model in black and white Harris Tweed, has a smart draped shoulder, and a smart as a poke across the back with the check cut in diagonally as a contrast. The check is double-breasted, with a rubber strap between the two on the outside and larger lapel lining.

The other coat is a pure double-breasted, with a rubber strap between the two on the outside and larger lapel lining.

How to Word Silk Shower Invitation

By MRS. BECKMAN

2—The shower will be held in the evening. I shall serve about 10 to 12. Is it all right to serve a chicken salad?

3—Since you have a special kind of silk shower in mind, it would not be enough to say "Silk Shower" for many of the guests might interpret "silk" in other kinds of gifts. But I do suggest that you change the wording and term your shower "Silk Lingerie Shower." Don't you like that more graceful word?

I keep hearing about the Ninth Circuit in Columbia picture, probably because Alan Dinehart, who will get his first starring chance, played the same role in the picture. I don't know New York. Owen Davis has authored this play which gave Dinehart such a break on the stage. Now he should benefit him on the screen.

Every once in a while some of the old timers of Hollywood thumb their noses at our mid-time directors. They needn't do it because it's the pioneer directors who know what they need and usually come out on top. WATCH THE DIRECTOR
PATRONIZE YOUR NEIGHBORHOOD THEATRE

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

By the measure of screen merit, aided and abetted by courage and sincerity, "Damaged Lives," given a memorable and unique premiere last night at the Majestic, is quite the most amazing product of all the sound screen. In manner hitherto untouched in the talkies, this Hollywood film plumbs the heart in a new way for its reaction of true audience interest. It thrills in a fashion entirely out of the run of the cinema's fiction mill.

There are fields of humor here and there, treading in the tide of fear and tension. I cannot but admire the deep insight of the producers, the author, director, and cast carry through; not once is there a false note; not once is it a superfluous difficult feat, and it is achieved perfectly.

It is a triumph of the human conviction itself: Lyman Williams strikes me as a comedian and fourth the situation of the stories. I had with varying personality, good voice, and even a little of the manner of Marceline Day all appear; and the doctor is the star of the cast. I am not sure if I get dramatic, under the skin, but reaches soul depths, and the whole tale has touched in you.

The lecture that makes up the second process is very different apart from our usual stage fare; but for ourselves we can say it is a beautiful and a most interesting show at the Majestic.

presented on the RKO Keith Boston stage, packs more color and fun than we have seen in acoon's age in a house of this type. It brings the meat of a Broadway production down to movie prices, and may be set upon the records as likely to establish an all-time record of attendance on the theater.

Catching the show at the midnight premiere, I may say that looked like a Hollywood opening. The house was sold out before the starting hour, and hundreds packed the lobby and sidewalk, so that it was quite a

Among the talented folk are Samamuels Brothers, winning an ovation for their comedy dancing; Collette Sisters, Jack Quires and Jean Travers.

On screen, the Boston offer a new film, "Headline Shooter," which has some wonderful photographic sequences, with its optional portion highlighting comedy in a romance of William Morgan, as a newsreel man, and Frances Dee, as a newspaper woman.

THUMBS RIDE—WINS TITLE

The king of Hopseshoe Pitchers. That's the title which now belongs to James O'Shea, 18, citizens' Conservation Corp. worker. He knew he could win. He didn't have money for carfare from Rockland to the Brockton Fair. He thumbed it. He won the title. Yes, he's a king.

FLANNEL HASH—TWO KINDS

Did you ever hear of flannel hash? The gourmets of New York tell of it consisting of red wine and many vegetables—but hark—from Boston editor comes this description of the discussed hash—that flannel hash is nothing more than the remains of a New England boiled dinner. Read the story, Salie Dudek, at Miller's Tavern, starts to prepare food for New England dinner—some of which ends up in flannel hash. (Story on Page 11.)

CHIEF DAMERY HAS TALK WITH NEWSPAPERMEN

The murder of little Margaret McCarthy of Somerville and the strange absence of Harry P. Cahill, wanted for questioning, has kept Chief Thomas Damery of Somerville police plenty busy. He's talking over late angles of search for Cahill with anxious newspapermen. Clues found thus far "definitely connect" Cahill with the strangling of the 10-year-old girl, the police chief said. The hunt for Cahill continues.

NOT VENICE, BUT OUR OWN SOMERVILLE

Residents of Somerville—unless they happened to live on the hill—virtually went to the sea in ships every time they left their homes today. The gale-driven rain flooded many of the city's streets. It was a big day for many a modern Water Raleigh, as Helen McGilvary, of Fountain st., will tell you. She is leaving the store of Attilio Ozzi, at Fountain and Glen sts.

CABOT BRIDAL

Dr. and Mrs. Charles F. Walcott leaving the First Church in Chestnut Hill today after they were quietly wedded. Mrs. Walcott was the former Susan M. Cabot, daughter of the late Henry R. and Mrs. Cabot, and because of her father's recent death the ceremony today was very unostentatious.

WOMEN LIST DEMOCRATIC VOTERS

Listing Democratic voters in the city, members of the Women's Democratic City Committee visited City Hall yesterday. They prepared the lists for use in November elections. Left to right, doing their work, are, Mrs. Henry Kamp, Helen A. MacDonald, election commissioner; Mildred C. Keane, standing, secretary of the Democratic City Committee, and Mrs. P. Nicholas Petronelli. Mailing lists are made from names received.

MARATHONERS READ LATE NEWS

The Boston Evening American supplies Johnny Nelson with latest news, while his partner, Tillie Moore, grabs a few winks. They've been going more than 2150 hours. Eight couples and two solos remain from field of 39 couples. "Foot sore and weary," is no mistake for their theme song. Johnny says he'll finish in the money.

"SPEND A DOLLAR AND MAKE A JOB"

BOSTON AMERICAN

"BUY IN SEPTEMBER AND BUY AMERICAN"

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN New England's Greatest Evening Newspaper SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1933

"Fill'er up, Mister—
I'M HELPING THE PRESIDENT!"

This is the seventh illustrated editorial of a series now appearing in the Hearst Newspapers on the importance of the Buy Now movement as a contribution to National Recovery.

You can do as Much... simply by BUYING NOW what you Need and Want!

MAYBE YOU HAVE NOTICED it at your favorite gas station. A Blue Eagle in the window. Another man or two on the job.

You get your gas and oil and a cleaned windshield—and get out on the road again a little faster.

You probably think it is grand. Why didn't we have this Recovery business before? It means that men go back to work—and customers get better service.

It's a swell idea all the way around!

But—stop and ask yourself this question: Who pays these men's wages? The gas and oil companies? Not by a long shot. All by themselves—they can't.

Because the companies that sell gasoline — like the companies that sell tires and cars—and shoes for you to wear — haven't any income except the money you spend for these things—the money you put in their till!

All the gasoline and tires and cars and shoes they make aren't worth a cent to anyone—until someone buys them.

And the men who sell the gas and tires and cars and shoes get their wages only because somebody comes in to buy! Somebody who has been fortunate in having a "job"—who may even have money laid away in the bank.

That's why such a man can help the President. That's why YOU can't also. That's why you MUST if Recovery is going to succeed.

Because, what good will it do to have 2,000,000 men re-employed—if there's not enough business to keep them on the job? They'll just be back in the bread-lines again—and next winter there will be more drives for Relief.

YOU CAN SEE how it works—you can see how easily you can help. Out of every dollar you spend for gasoline, a part goes to pay the wages of the man who fills your tank.

Another part helps pay the railroad man who transported the gasoline.

Still another part helps provide employment for men in refineries, at the oil wells, on the pipe lines. And every dollar you spend is split up in the same way. It goes to make more jobs, pay more wages—in fact, to keep the country going.

Figure it out. It all comes down to this. When you scrimp and save and pinch your pennies, you are holding up Recovery by making less work for men with jobs—for new men recently employed.

When you spend sensibly and buy what you need and can afford, you're helping business to flow in the normal way and aiding in keeping re-employed men at work.

So it's obvious that your part in Recovery is a simple one—with a tremendous effect. All you have to do as an individual to help bring Recovery at the earliest moment is to SPEND—spend NOW—and spend in a normal way.

That's why we tell you to BUY IN SEPTEMBER.

Buy in September — because it's the normal time to stock up for the winter.

Buy in September—because the country needs stimulated buying at once.

Inspect your wardrobe now. What clothes do you need? What does the family need? Check up on the kitchen pantry. How about fuel for the season ahead? Lay in now the supplies and provisions you will need later.

The reason isn't so important. Action is. The man in the White House has set us all an example by doing things —FAST. Get busy yourself—BUY NOW!

BUY IN SEPTEMBER — BUY AMERICAN!

When Men Get Old— Unless PRODUCTIVELY Busy, They Are Rarely Happy

SIR JAMES BARRIE, OF LITERARY FAME, DOES NOT LOOK VERY CHEERFUL.

Everybody knows that old age, by poverty and neglect, is bitter for men and women. Thomas Hood put the unhappy truth in three lines.

"When he is forsaken,
Withered and shaken,
What can an old man do but die?"

The two men whose pictures are published in this column are, of course, not included in the "old" that are "forsaken, withered and shaken."

Yet they are not happy, their faces show it. The world praises them, showers compliments on them. They are invited to dinners, and to make speeches. And they ACCEPT. But THEY ARE NO LONGER PRODUCTIVE OF THEIR BEST WORK. They cannot do what they did in their youth. THEY may not know it, realize it or admit it, but the world and the publishers know it. If they write a book, it does not sell, or the energy to write it does not come.

And nothing is more bitter than to OUTLIVE YOURSELF to look at a past filled with success, and to present without that success, the forlorn PRODUCTION that makes life worth while.

Happy the old man who still has work to do that is WANTED, who feels, as he goes through life, that he contributes something to the lives of others, if only the most humble and useful work.

As you look at these two faces, you know that an old carpenter, seaman or richly, still able to drive a nail straight, frame though he be no more important work than building the frame of a little chicken coop or small barn, is happier than these "geniuses," with the genius gone before them.

No Room for Chiselers Public Works Funds Must Be Guarded

The national government wants to be sure that the vast sums expended for public works shall be disbursed properly and honestly.

It wants to eliminate the gyp contractor, the fat politician. The cut-in man and all the others who can cheat and chisel.

David Barry of Providence has been designated by Secretary Ickes to supervise the government public works in New England in the interest of honesty. Mr. Barry is a practical man, who has been around and seen things, and he would not hesitate to put his finger on graft or corruption wherever he found it to exist.

In Massachusetts, we have a State Finance Commission, whose approval must be gained for the public works projects which originate in the cities and towns. We have also a State Emergency Public Works Commission, including ex-Governor Fuller, which will inspect these projects after they have obtained the prior consent of the State Finance Commission.

Perhaps there seems to be more or less of red-tape to be waded before these projects can be put into operation. But this supervision will pay for itself in the long run.

These projects are designed to put men to work who otherwise would be idle, relying upon public charity. These projects are designed to rebuild the facilities of the country and State. These projects are to be paid for by the taxpayers.

For these reasons the public should be protected from the waste of their money by the first politician, the snide contractor and the other harpies who live by their wit at the expense of the public treasury.

At the Side Table

Most people will be surprised to learn that 445 American communities have adopted the city manager plan in order to free themselves from the burdens of official incompetency and political extravagance.

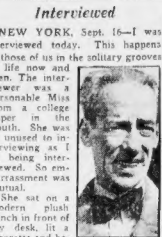

The fact has just been brought to notice by Will Irwin in the notable series of articles that he is writing for the Boston Sunday Advertiser on the faults and defects of our complicated system of State and local government.

Mr. Irwin calls attention to President Roosevelt's estimate that we have in this country 250,000 units of government—ALL COLLECTING TAXES.

"The luckiest taxpayer among us," comments Mr. Irwin, "lives under four layers; the unluckiest as many as ten or twelve. In organization, in methods they belong mostly to the eighteenth century, when most of them were founded."

This whole antiquated system will have to be changed—counties abolished, municipalities rechartered and local districts reorganized along Statewide lines in order to eliminate the ruinous evils of duplicated taxation and of hordes of unnecessary political jobholders.

O. O. McIntyre New York Day by Day

Interviewed

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—I was interviewed today. This happens to those of us in the solitary groove of life, now and then. The interviewer was a personable Miss from a college paper, from the South. She was as unending in her questions as I was in my answers. She was to be interviewed. She touched a tender area of memory. But I replied: "Two bucks a week." Then of a sudden I had one of those raptures which I have used to dub "a loud interview."

I halted proceedings while I sent across to the Waldorf for a typewriter. Why not get down exactly what was said between us in "he" and "she" fashion? And perhaps I could kill two birds with one stone—an article for her and a column for myself. Here it is, anyway.

She: Who influenced you most to take up newspaper work?

He: James T. Johnson, a small town newspaper reporter.

She: Why?

He: Because I heard he got $18 a week and passed to everything.

She: Has there been a time when you wished you had gone into some other calling?

He: Well, I watched Lindbergh drive up Fifth avenue on his return from France. That made everything else look rather silly.

She: What do you mean by that?

He: I mean, I know. It just popped out.

She: Why is it that you never write of politics or world events?

He: I leave those topics to weather men.

She: Do you know most of your readers think you are only-poly and bald?

He: I wouldn't know about that. You can see for yourself it is I believe. Would you say I'm bald?

He: I wouldn't. But I warn you I'm bald in the rum.

She: For how many papers do you write?

He: I cannot say precisely. Considerably more than 300.

She: Every writer has a theme running through his stuff. What would you say is yours?

He: O. I should say huckleberry.

She: Do you have many interruptions while turning out your columns?

He: Many. But not so interesting as this.

She: You know how to compel them.

He: I have my moments. You should catch me in a hammock with a mandolin!

She: You have written New York is the ideal city. Is there anything you think is lacking? That is, something very essential?

He: Outside of the feeling of hills, nothing.

She: Do you still wear all those money shirts and neckties I've read about?

He: I rainbow a little now and then. Somebody has to tell Jimmy Walker away.

She: Even that green house robe you wear could not exactly be called modest.

He: It could be if one wanted to be ineffectual.

She: In your personal life I don't remember of you telling what word you have misapplied more than any other?

He: I always said Adirondack with three A's. What is yours?

She: Please. I am interviewing.

He: I stand corrected. Man lost all rights long ago.

She: I notice the books in this room are modern.

He: Modern writers are beating the old times.

She: Very few outlandish Swifts. And Chaucer is just pretty good.

He: I must be going. It was nice of you to see me.

She: It was good of you to come. Those barling hyenas in the hall won't bite. They say just a couple of hilly-livered fellows.

Not isn't; and we shouldn't. A certain amount of remorse—decent interval of regret and confession—that's necessary and healthy. But still, that look out FOR REMORSE CAN, AND OFTEN DOES, SPEEDILY RE-MAKE A RACKET!

Why do we "take the blame" and keep on taking it? Sometimes because we are honestly sorry and want to mend our ways. But often, there's quite a different motive.

Reign human, we like to show off.

And confessing our sins is one of the best possible ways of hogging the spotlight.

Regretting our sins can be, in fact, as concealed an act as boasting about 'em.

We can't force people to listen to us endlessly while we praise ourselves. But every decent citizen feels a moral obligation to lend a sympathetic ear, and, hand, to the fellow who's confessing his sin. Also, such listening tickles human vanity—makes the decent citizen feel that he's Mr. God. So, on two counts we're always sure of an audience if we start getting sorry.

Van chronic regret is certainly a member of the decent citizen's self. And it serves an even more useful end—IT POSTPONING REAL REFORM.

The immediate and necessary step after being sorry is, of course, getting busy and making good. No forming and ineffectual process. It implies retiring from the spot light and taking your rap which means plenty of humiliation and hard work. Naturally, no lazy, cowardly, conceited human being is going to begin a program like that! And so, though we may be sincerely sorry for a bad record, we like to find some scheme whereby we can postpone starting a new one, and yet save our faces.

ALLOWING IN REGRET SERVES THAT PURPOSE PERFECTLY.

You can postpone reform definitely by just talking about it. At the same time you can gratify your desire for publicity, all the while, and get a vicarious kick out of remembering your past delinquencies. Could anything be sweeter? Nothing could!

Nor could any habit be more demoralizing. More good human time and energy are wasted—more usefulness is committed—under the "sacred" pretence of remorse and grief, than in all the crime on the police blotter.

It's as vicious to spend your time regretting your sins as it was to commit them originally. In either case you waste, soil and adenose life and devote all attention to your own selfish aim.

If you're really sorry and ashamed for something you've done, don't talk about it; don't grieve over it. GET BUSY! Get busy and do something useful and constructive—something of which you can be justly proud.

ACTION IS THE ONLY REAL REPENTANCE.

SNIVELING OVER YOUR SINS IS JUST ANOTHER FORM OF OPAFENESS!

Hand in Hand

All the way to Age we'll go
Hand in hand together
All the way to brows of snow
Through every sort of weather.
Rain or shine, blue sky or gray,
Joy and sorrow share the day
Hand in hand along the way
We'll go bravely faring.

Hand in Hand

All the way to sunset land
We'll walk down together
Side by side and hand in hand
Beld by Comd's tether.
Once we started on this way
Steps we'll long remember;
So we'll trip the miles away
Even to December.

Let the years go feeling by

Gray old age shall find us
Still reaching smile and sigh
And though years left behind us
We'll still be young and gay.
Worn by wind and weather,
All the way to Age we'll go
Hand in hand together.

Garner One of Few Who Has Kept the Faith

By James T. Williams, Jr.

As the national process of purging the federal Constitution of the prohibition amendment nears a victorious conclusion, Vice-President Garner emerges from the conflict with that high distinction so rare among public men of having "kept the faith."

The record of Mr. Garner in regard to the Eighteenth Amendment, which out prohibition in the Federal Constitution, ought to be "read, marked, learned and inwardly digested" by his fellow citizens and those who pretend to serve them in public life.

Although coming from a "dry" state and from one of the driest districts in the state of Texas, Mr. Garner, as a Representative in Congress, voted against the Eighteenth Amendment when it was before the House.

But when that amendment was finally written into the Constitution, Mr. Garner, who, as a representative in Congress, had been elected in support of the Constitution, believed it to be his duty to vote in favor of enforcing that amendment while it remained a part of the Constitution.

PERFORMED HIS DUTY

This duty he fearlessly performed year after year in utter disregard of the political consequences in either in his own district and state or in the House of Representatives.

It was the Eighteenth Amendment and not its nullification, as Mr. Garner believed, that was the just and honorable way for the American people to rid themselves of the curse of prohibition.

All the time that Mr. Garner was a member of the House, he voted on this matter as his conscience dictated, hypocrites and demagogues all about him were voting in obedience to the orders of organized minorities or tyrannical majorities.

On March 4, 1933, a resolution was voted upon by the House which called for the reestablishment of the 18th Amendment.

STRONGLY CRITICIZED

Mr. Garner was speaker of the house at the time. A large part of the responsibility of the leadership of his party in the House rested upon his shoulders. It would have been easy for him to advance his chances for the presidency by taking the line in support of the resolution. He was strongly criticized by some of its advocates for not availing himself of this privilege. His vote would neither have passed nor defeated the resolution. It would have been a mere formality. A strong effort was made to induce Mr. Garner to stump the state of Texas this year in advocacy of the repeal of prohibition. This he declined to do upon the ground that as vice-president of the United States the constitution imposed upon him an authority or responsibility for the national administration and the people for or against amending the federal constitution.

GARNER "KEPT FAITH"

Mr. Garner contented himself with informing his fellow citizens of the political consequences upon this question, and then set them the example of voting his own conviction.

Repeal of the prohibition from the day he voted against the adoption of the amendment until the day a few weeks ago he voted for its repeal. Mr. Garner, however, as speaker of the House, and as vice-president of the United States has "kept the faith" with his conscience and distinction. Time and events have vindicated his statesmanship.

Human Side of the News World Famous "Mounties" Uphold Majesty of Canada Over 1,400,000 Trackless Square Miles

By Edwin C. Hill

Age cannot wither nor custom stale the glory and the glamor of the Mounties, the lean, hard men in scarlet tunics and wide-brimmed hats. In fiction, in the movies and in hard fact they are matched only by the French Foreign Legion and the Texas Rangers for deeds of almost legendary valor.

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police, to give them their official name, have been celebrating their sixtieth anniversary of their service as administrators of justice and maintainers of the right in the millions of square miles of plains and mountains and waterways which stretch between the Atlantic and the Pacific, and from the Great Lakes to the North Pole. It was in the days of the Canadian Wild West that the Mounties won their spurs and established themselves in the high regard of all who admire brave and resolute men.

It was in 1870 that the Canadian government acquired the western provinces, and it was just 60 years ago this time that the government established law in the huge frontier region extending from the Red River in the south to the Rocky Mountains and from the International boundary in the Polar Sea.

But in a few weeks the Rache mounted police built up a reputation that made them a world-famous. In those early years, when the prairies were abuzzing with a multitude of settlers from Europe, the mounted policeman was more than a symbol of law. With an uncanny mixture of tact and resolution, he dealt with refractory Indians and troublesome halfbreeds and with the criminal elements that followed in the wake of the settlers. When the discovery of gold sent a horde of treasure hunters flocking into the Yukon, the mounted police kept order in the rough, hot-blooded mining camps and made life and property safe all the way from Chitina to Klondike.

Today it is in scarlet jacket, breeches and puttees, and a bearskin cap rather than broad-brimmed sombrero and behemoth dog team or at the stick of an Indian, that the mounted policeman performs the duties that bring him into the news of the day. He is a man of action and in the movies, in the press and in the work of his own hands, he is a man of action.

His work nowadays corresponds to that of our State Police and game wardens, with a dash of secret service duty included.

But up in Yukon Land, around Hudson Bay and in the Arctic Circle, a corporal's guard of these determined chaps are the sole upholders of law and order in the Dominion. Their domain is a bleak and trackless region of 1,400,000 square miles, almost the size of the United States, and in many parts a barren waste, except for lichen, moss and stunted shrubs. The constant of the Arctic is entirely on his own. Salaried and unpaid journeys are his lot through the snows and ice traversing single stretches of water.

As Great Bear Lake or Great Slave Lake, with areas of 10,000 square miles, or traveling the miles between the Peace River, with only his dogs to keep him company, and perhaps tracking down a trespasser at the end of a 200-mile chase.

He is a police officer, magistrate, coroner, marriage license clerk, immigration inspector, customs officer, fisherman and game warden, administrator of estates, guard of criminals and insane persons, physician to the sick and conductor of the funeral procession of a deceased clergyman. He is the Law. He is the white man's government.

He is the world's greatest as a great adventure is just every day of his life. The story of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in these Far North patrols. The inspector Albert H. Joy, with two companions, made a 1,000-mile patrol in the uncharted territory of the Arctic. It took them 81 days to make the trip and was considered withing out of the ordinary. It was three months after their departure from North Devon Island that Joy and his companions reached the post at Repulse, and in all that time they had not seen another human being and had lived by their own wits on polar bear, seal and caribou.

Peninsula post figured in the news by way of Greenland. An Eskimo arrived in Greenland with a letter conveyed in Commissioner McEwen of the Royal Mounted that the three constables up there at Repulse, no top of the world, were alive and well. Nothing had been heard from them for two years, the heavy ice of last summer having prevented the ship from Hudson Bay reaching them.

How had they spent their time? There was an item in their report which told the story. They had made a 3,000-mile journey through the Arctic searching for the man geologist, Kreuger, who with two companions had been up in the back of beyond since 1929. The boat gets through before this summer is done with, the three will be relieved. Others there they will stay, on the job.

The Canadian government must keep policemen in the Arctic because, in the words of a kindly person, is still living in the dark ages. But not to be wrong, for example, in suicide or in the destruction of children, then the heavy ice of last summer, the induction of firearms into the Arctic would be a crime of violence and to the wanton destruction of game and for loss of animals.

The Royal Canadian Mounted police today number 2,000 officers and men. They are a fine body of men, and as they dash along we see on magazine covers about one out of ten is a horse. Automobiles, motorcycles and dog sledges far outnumber the horses. AMONG the more encouraging signs of recovery must be noted the appearance of a better waste, the Pacific River, but we shall hesitate to admit that the boom in New York is actually under way in fact, until the return of the Atlantic City sea serpent.

THOSE Cuban officers, quartered in a Havana hotel where all the hired help fled, refused to quit. They demand of the revolutionaries, and why on earth should they? Think of living at a hotel with not a soul to tip!
